The Delicate Balance: Human Values and Iowa’s Natural Resources

Location: 1st floor - entrance near Mammoth exhibit.

Iowa’s environment has changed over time. Some changes to the environment happen as a result of nature’s activities - such as floods and tornadoes. Other changes to the environment are brought about by human activities, such as building roads and burning fossil fuel.

1. List some ways in which nature can cause changes in the environment. Next, list ways in which human activity changes the environment.

2. Why was coal mining so important for Iowa?

3. Iowa protects its wildlife and environment in various ways. Name at least two of them.

“You Gotta Know the Territory!”

Location: 2nd Floor

From 1838 to 1846, the area that was to become the state of Iowa was a territory inhabited by Native Americans and also by settlers trying to start a new life. It was a time of many changes. Look at the Native American cultures and their way of life. Look at the settlers and their way of life. Think of your own hometown. What was it like 150 years ago? When did your family come to Iowa?

1. Look at all the artifacts that show the different responsibilities of the Native American women. Name three of those responsibilities.

2. Look at the section named “Never Done.” What activities did these women do in the house and on the farm?

3. The section named “Urban Frontier” explains how three early Iowa towns developed. Match the town with the reason why it developed.

- | | |
|--------------|----------------|
| 1. Keokuk | A. Army Fort |
| 2. Dubuque | B. River town |
| 3. Davenport | C. Lead mining |

Mammoth: Witness to Change

Location: Atrium

Somewhere around 10,000 years ago, the climate began warming and the Ice Age ended. As the glaciers retreated, the environment and plant and animal life changed. New hunters, human ones, arrived and brought more pressure on the mammoth and they became extinct. Mammoth fossils - their teeth and bones - have been unearthed through everyday activities of Iowans as they farm the land or dig into the earth for construction projects.

1. What other animals lived in Iowa during the time of the Mammoth?

2. Why do you think the mammoth became extinct?
